Student Rights and Responsibilities

UEA is a premier research and teaching university. We are dedicated to the advancement of learning and the increase of knowledge, to satisfy the aspirations of individuals and to contribute to economic, social and cultural progress. UEA is also a community of which students form a substantial part. It is our aspiration that all members exhibit good citizenship within that community and in their dealings with the wider world.

Students have the right to:

- participate in the academic, intellectual, cultural and social life of the University;
- use University property, grounds and facilities for all permitted and legitimate purposes;
- receive support for their learning through contact with academic staff at teaching events, advice from a personal adviser, and access to relevant learning support facilities, including library and computer provision;
- receive fair and transparent assessments with marked work returned in a timely manner which allows constructive feedback;
- be treated fairly by staff and with courtesy and respect;
- study within a structure governed by clearly articulated policies, procedures and regulations.

Students have the responsibility to:

- engage energetically with the educational opportunities provided by the University;
- respect University property, grounds and facilities so they may be equally available to others;
- respect the rights of other students and staff by refraining from actions that may compromise or disrupt academic activities or other events, or that prevent others from freely expressing their views in accordance with the law;
- ensure that all work submitted for assessment is their own work and not the work of someone else, except where collaboration is expressly permitted and acknowledged;
- treat staff and other students with courtesy and respect;
- understand and follow the appropriate policies, procedures and regulations governing their study at the University.

Details of the University policies, procedures and regulations are set out at <http://> etc etc

Students on courses that lead to registration with a Professional and/or Statutory Body, (PSB) shall also be bound by the requirements of the relevant PSB. Details are obtainable from the relevant School of Study.
